

EDMONTON YOUTH MEETS HIS DEATH IN NORTHERN RIVER

'Twas Funny Then

When the Rev. H. F. Davidson faced charges which involved certain moral turpitude and alleged contributing to the delinquency of minor girls, it was quite a joke not to the pastor but to the Barbara Harris, shown here, also. But the trial of the pastor has dragged out for days and London has been treated to one of the snappiest courtroom scenes of years. The case concluded today.

Fred Firth, Son of Contractor, Is Crowned Pay North

When the turbulent waters of the Finlay river when the raft on which he and two prospecting companions were taking a season's supplies into the placer mining country, capsized in the rapid, Fred Firth, 23, of Edmonton, son of W. B. Firth, well-known painter contractor, was drowned on May 22, according to word which reached the city late Monday.

With two other men Firth left Edmonton about four weeks ago carrying with them provisions of several months' supply to take placer claims in British Columbia, and according to the meagre information available they had already located several promising claims when the tragedy occurred.

Following the drowning one of the other men in the party made his way through the bush country to a cabin at Hope, where word of the tragedy was telegraphed to Edmonton, and little is known of the accident here other than what has arrived in short news.

Mounted Police officers have been notified and are now on their way to the scene of the accident. An effort will be made to recover the body.

The oldest son was killed in a canoeing accident in the city and died at his home. Several years ago he was accidentally killed while on a boat in the city.

Members of the Canadian Legion expressed their regret over the accident on Tuesday, as Mr. Firth, 23, has been an executive of the local Canadian Legion branch for many years.

His death was a great loss to the city and his family.

peering through the bars at walls as high as their own.

The channels having been thus walled-up, trade has ceased to flow, and those who live by trade directly and indirectly are out of employment and in distress. All the others are sharing in the results of the folly. But the others may take what consolation they can find in knowing that the two countries that led the world in erecting the barriers are themselves suffering the most acute consequences of the restriction.

In this lies the hope that the nations may turn in desperation to a safer trade policy, as the way out of the dead-lock of the United States with all its gold is not particularly better off than Germany without gold, it must be dawning on the distressed people of both countries that the end of trade-killing is in sight.

The Calmer Life
By Edgar A. Guest

Nothing more from life does man require Than rain, bread and food and fire.

With cheer, though humble they may be, The spring flowers blowing in the air.

The joy of laughter he can know, Can watch his little garden grow, And in his own life find his own.

Make interesting all his days.

How many years shall man be vain In seeking peace from luxury and pain? How well it is to high goals to reach, This truth alone success can teach:

That no estate from care is free, And no man can happy be.

Who rich or poor, or high or low, Will render the common place.

The happiness man hopes to find Is truly of the heart and mind; A gift that lies himself within, Not something he must fight to win.

Through rich or poor who plays the man And does the little that he can Time's ordinary tasks to share Can find life's purpose anywhere.

For this star from Port Arthur comes a story sent brought from the tomb of King Tut has spread through the world in a hundredfold.

The same story has been told before about what from Egyptian tombs. But the Encyclopedia Britannica says: "There is no warrant for the popular notion that genuine mummy is still genuine."

The Passing Show
By J. S. Cooper

Amelia Earhart Putnam a week ago today, flew the Atlantic alone. Her frail resemblance to Lindbergh had been previously commented on.

Now she has emulated Lindbergh's flight, and she has flown from Newfoundland to Ireland and from New York to Paris. Like Lindbergh she has been a wealthy marriage. Let us hope the parallel will go further, and that she may be spared from any such tragedy as Lindbergh has known.

The excellent time made by Mrs. Putnam on her lone flight, recalls that until last Saturday, the record for the fastest time was held by Captain Alcock and Brown, the English flyers who were the first to make the crossing over ten years ago. Alcock and Brown did their work, as Kipling would say.

"After the way of the Eagle, With straight-flung wings and few." So little hub-bub was made about this pioneer flight with machine, engine and instruments much inferior to those which Lindbergh was able to obtain, that there are people today unaware that the Atlantic was flown by two English airmen years before Lindbergh made his flight.

The successful flight of Mrs. Putnam also recalls that eighty years ago the New York Sun, in its issue of April 13, 1844, announced the westward crossing of the Atlantic in 74 hours by one Monk Moscon and three companions, in a steering balloon of Moscon's invention.

The only thing wrong with that announcement was that the steering balloon and Monk Moscon and the three companions, in a steering balloon of Moscon's invention.

Health and Diet Advice
By Dr. Frank McCoy

Ripe, luscious cherries are among the most tempting of fruits. They have been used by man for many thousands of years. The cherry tree grows wild in many parts of Europe, and the Caucasus of Asia. Cultivated cherries were familiar to the ancients.

It is related that when Lucullus returned in triumph to Rome after his victory over the Mithridates he carried back with him a cherry tree laden with fruit. From that time cultivated cherries have been discovered in the ruins of the lake dwellings in Switzerland. The name of the cherry is taken from the Greek meaning horn, referring to the wood which is as hard as horn.

Cherries belong to the stone fruits, or the drupes, of the same family as plums, peaches and apricots. There are over two hundred and fifty kinds of cherries, some of which are sweet, sour, dark, bright red, firm, soft and some heart-shaped. The cherry is grown in more climates than any other single fruit, since it is found from Vancouver to Newfoundland, and from Texas to Colorado, also growing in Europe, China and Japan.

In North America the cherry is one of the first fruits which appears in the late spring to tempt one's appetite after the winter. The cherry is not so plentiful. Its attractive red color, tart flavor, and general deliciousness, makes it a very tempting fruit at the beginning of the summer fruit season.

Besides the cherry, which is one of the fruits of the year, it is also employed in making beverages. Some of these are cherry bounce, cherry cordial, and cherry brandy. In the Upper Rhine, the pulp is fermented and bottled in the famous Kirshwasser, Zars in Germany, is famed for its marvellous liquor of cherries and honey.

The cherry is a natural fruit sugar and also the vitamins and mineral elements which may be lacking in other fruits. They are about 80 per cent pure water, and contain almost 1 per cent of malic acid, and 0.5 per cent of citric acid. The cherry pulp is a rich source of iron, 1.5 per cent of carbohydrates, 8 per cent fat, 7 per cent of mineral matter, consisting of a good amount of potassium, magnesium and calcium.

The cherry season is short and everyone should make use of the cherries while they are abundant. While cherries are especially wholesome when used by the heart and stomach, they are also good for the lungs, and therefore have the reputation of causing indigestion.

During the hot weather it is a good plan to make a meal of cherries alone, or with a little cream, more can be eaten in this way. Cherries also combine well with milk, especially if the cherries are chewed and the milk stirred slowly in between. The quality of cherries and milk to make a good combination may surprise many people, but it should be borne in mind that even a small amount of bread or cake, eaten at the same time would likely cause trouble in the stomach.

Cherry fads, using no other foods for a few days, are especially valuable in pimples, whiteheads and other skin troubles. Of course, enamel should be used at the same time, and the teeth should be cleaned.

The cherry fat is very healthful and assists in clearing the skin. The best way to do it is to use all of the cherries, and to eat them slowly. The cherry fat is very healthful and assists in clearing the skin. The best way to do it is to use all of the cherries, and to eat them slowly.

They were discussing the fact that a general depression always brings a return of formality and courtesy.

"Two or three years ago," commented a charming matron, "I used to be always protesting against the lack of manners displayed by most people, and one day my daughter replied, 'Oh, mother, it's smart to be rude these days, we simply haven't time for manners, were all too busy enjoying ourselves.'"

"And when I sent out the invitations to my daughter's wedding four years ago," she continued, "I only got 110 replies from 350 invitations, and yet practically all the guests came. But this year, when my youngest daughter was married, only two of the invited guests failed to reply!"

Edmonton Members Will Attend June Convention in Calgary

Canadian press women from many parts of the province will be in Alberta at the end of June to attend the annual convention of the Canadian Women's Press Club which is being held in Calgary June 28, 29 and 30. A large party of women writers from Edmonton will travel south for the meet, it is expected, to join fellow members of the club in the province.

A very delightful program has been arranged for the Calgary branch of the C.W.P.C. members of which are acting as hostesses. A number of features are being planned for the delight of participants, and an opportunity will be given to meet "old-timers" including an informal session of the "Montreal" club. The party is to be the pleasure of the members of the club, and a veteran missionary who has spent a lifetime among the Plains Indians, and an expert of the early trappers, will recall days of "riding the range" as cowboys.

An outing to be remembered will be a trip on Wednesday, June 28, to the Royal T. Ranch, owned by the late T. H. Ranch, near the mouth of the Bow River. The party is to leave Calgary after lunch for the 48-mile drive to the ranch. The party is to be met by the ranch owner, and the party is to be met by the ranch owner, and the party is to be met by the ranch owner.

Hope Diamond Curse Alive In Lindbergh Baby "Ransom"

Death of Son Followed Purchase Bad Luck Is Pursuing In Gem Path

WASHINGTON, May 31.—Has the curse of the great Hope diamond struck again in the latest misfortune to befall Mrs. Edward B. McLean?

Has the woman who defies superstition to wear this sinister gem been marked again by the spell that has taken a toll of death and bereavement from every owner through three centuries?

Mrs. McLean says she gave Gaston B. Means, former friend of President Harding and ex-federal agent, $100,000 in cash when Means assured her he could secure the return of the Lindbergh baby. She charges him with larceny of the fund entrusted to him in what she brands as a hoax.

Friends with a flair for the romantic are wondering if this incident is another example of the hard luck that has dogged the McLeans ever since the Washington publisher presented the beautiful but ill-fated Hope diamond to his wife.

For the loss of $100,000 in cash, if it is lost, is not the only trouble that has marked the career of this wealthy member of Washington's highest social set. Her home, formerly one of the gayest in the nation's capital, is broken up. She and her rich husband have parted, and he has married another. Their dowered son is dead—struck down by an automobile despite every precaution.

Their story is perhaps the most colorful in Washington.

Parents of both Mr. and Mrs. McLean were millionaires many times over. "Ned" McLean was the son of John B. McLean, owner of the Cincinnati Enquirer and Washington Post-Evening News, who became his bride, was the daughter of the millionaire Colorado copper king, Tom McLean.

Washington soon began to notice them. They entertained lavishly, spending money with such carelessness that they were called "the McLeans' money" on plates of solid gold, dinner parties on plates of solid gold, and their home was the most beautiful social center in the nation's capital.

His son gave the jewel to King Louis XIV of France, who gave it to one of his favorites, Madame de Montespan. She soon lost her place in the monarch's affections and any other court favorite to whom it passed was killed within two years.

Lord Hope bought it and thus it gained its name. Soon after, Lord Hope's wife eloped with a lover and he sold the diamond to a London jeweler, who immediately went bankrupt.

It passed next to Sultan Abdul Hamid of Turkey, who lost his throne. Eventually, it found its way to New York where McLean bought it for his bride.

For a time, the happiness of the McLeans continued, but later the shadow of tragedy began to creep over their lives.

The first act in the series of tragic events was the death of their nine-year-old son, Vincent McLean, heir to a fortune of $100,000,000.

From birth, the child had been guarded and protected by every precaution that could be thrown around him. A special railroad car was built for his travels, to guard against train accidents and sudden shocks. The McLeans' mansion in Washington was surrounded by a high stone wall as a protection against burglars. Detectives accompanied his nurse every time they ventured out.

In Paris, he told reporters that he would travel around the world, if necessary, to obtain a divorce. He said that he had already married again.

In Biga, Latvia, McLean tried again last December. He filed suit and mailed the summons to his wife in a box disguised as a Christmas gift. Mrs. McLean opened it. The net result was that the district court of Biga, Latvia, ordered that McLean should appear and answer or his wife should be adjudged divorced.

So started the latest chapters in the life of the Hope diamond and the Hope diamond and the Hope diamond.

McLean went to Mexico and sought to obtain a divorce, but was balked by Mrs. McLean's attorneys who got an injunction in a Washington court. Nevertheless, McLean married twice in Mexico and took his bride—the former Rose Douran—on a cruise of Long Island, N.Y.—with him to Europe.

He said that he had already married again.

In Grasp of Misfortune

One Day Vision was playing in his walled playground when a gardener, not noticing the child, left the gate open. The boy dashed out to the roadway for an instant view of the open world. But he ran directly in the path of an oncoming automobile and was killed instantly.

Someone asked Mrs. McLean if she would dispose of the Hope diamond then. She replied: "I already have brought me all the suffering it possibly can bring. I shall keep it."

The McLeans continued to play a big part in Washington society, and with the coming of the Harding administration they rose to new heights. Senator Harding had been one of McLean's closest friends, and Mrs. Harding had been a very close friend of Mrs. McLean. Their connection became Washington's most brilliant social center.

The highest officials of the Harding administration frequently dined there. Among them were Attorney General Daugherty and Secretary of Interior Albert B. Fall.

Then tragedy, in the form of the earthquake of the Harding administration, crossed their path again. The McLeans' social position faded. Daugherty and Fall departed from their high positions of trust. President Harding died before the expiration of his term, and Mrs. Harding died thereafter.

McLean tried to save his fortune. He had loaned Fall $100,000 which had mysteriously come into the latter's possession. Later it was shown that this was an ill-borne loan. Fall had received and McLean admitted his statement was false.

McLean recently domestic tragedy had crept into the private lives of the McLeans. They separated.

New of the rift between them came when Mrs. McLean filed suit against her husband for divorce.

He had refused to divorce her and three children. She asked $100,000 monthly, stating that it cost them at least $400,000 a month to live. A Washington judge awarded her $7500 monthly.

MORE ABOUT CITY GRANTS

In the light of what the matrons, acting for and from the city, were in the field of public service organizations was a question which could result to make a desirable point.

Organizations appealing for grants appeared at the meeting and outlined their reasons for needing the financial support of the city. The relief given out in each case, the receipts and the expenditures and the number of distressed persons given aid were items in the reports made by the various institutions.

Following the hearing of representatives of these organizations, which occupied the major portion of the time of the meeting, attention was turned to the question.

Asked for his opinion on the payment of grants, City Solicitor J. C. F. Brown, K.C., stated that the city could not make public use of the money. He believed that all the grants were made by the city.

These included transportation for disabled soldiers on the street car, an item which cost $10,000 a month. The city could not make a grant of $10,000 a month, he believed.

Also a grant of $200 to the Humane Society. This might be included in the activities of the police. Here again, said the solicitor, it might be justly maintained by the city that it would cost more than $200 to carry out this duty.

The next grant questioned by the solicitor was that of $100 for the conversion of a school building. This was also a grant of $100 to the Alameda County Jail, which was a grant of $100 to the Alameda County Jail.
